

ELVIS DUNCAN OF MOKENA PASSES BEYOND

Elvis Larkin Duncan, aged 78 years, life long resident of the Mokena territory, died Sunday at 12:15 a. m. in the Silver Cross hospital, Joliet following a major operation.

Mr. Duncan was taken critically ill a week ago, and an emergency operation was resorted to.

Mr. Duncan was born September 25, 1856 on his father's farm near Mokena. He was engaged in agricultural pursuits all his life.

In 1900 he moved with his sister, Amelia to their new home on the Wolf Road, south of Mokena, where he resided until the day of his death.

He attained the age of 78 years, 3 months and 18 days.

Surviving him are his sister, Miss Amelia Duncan of Mokena, with whom he made his home; four nephews, Warren Harper of Kent, Wash., Fred Duncan of San Diego, California, Bert Duncan of San Francisco, California and Tilford Duncan of Chicago; two nieces, Della Harper of Kent, Wash., and Josephine Duncan of Chicago.

Mr. Duncan was a member of one of Will County's earliest pioneer families. His father, Tilford Duncan came to this locality in 1833 from Lexington, Kentucky and his mother Lucy Ann Owen came here in 1834 with her father Francis Owen, from near Louisville, Ky.

Mr. Duncan was a man of sober habits and a deeply religious nature. His kindness and generosity won him many friends who join with his family in mourning his loss.

Funeral services were held at the late home on Tuesday afternoon at two o'clock, with Rev. Harold Gray pastor of the Mokena Methodist church, officiating. Burial took place in the Marshall cemetery, west of Mokena.

Orland PTA Sponsors Tap Dancing Course

The Orland Park PTA announces as part of its "leisure time" activity a course in tap dancing lessons for the children of the community. Tap dancing, besides being a popular and "up-to-the-minute" activity, is also considered an excellent safety valve for the energies of the average child. It not only provides them with an educational amusement, but gives them supervised exercise, teaches them rhythm, muscular co-ordination, and obedience to and co-operation with instruction.

Mrs. Mary Tucker of Chicago, a Normal School Graduate in physical education, has been secured as instructor. Classes will be held in the school auditorium. Any child, whether they go to the Orland Park school or not is eligible to take this course. These classes will be held once each week, probably on Tuesday afternoons from 3:45 to 5:45 p. m.

In order to place these lessons within the reach of every child in the community, it has been arranged to give this course at a rate of only 10 cents a lesson for each child. It is possible, that if enough can be secured to take the course, that a class of grownups may be organized at a slightly higher fee, perhaps 15 cents a lesson. These fees, though extremely small as regards the individual, are expected and hoped to provide in the aggregate, not only sufficient funds to carry on the project successfully, but to provide also some excess revenue which will be applied to the non-revenue producing activities of the organization, such as the Welfare Clinic, School Aid and community educational projects.

This project has the sanction of the school board and will be sponsored and supervised by a competent committee of the Orland Park PTA. Every parent is urged to take advantage of this opportunity to add to the cultural training of his child by permitting the child to take the course as outlined above.

Mrs. Sherman S. Knox, President of the Orland Park PTA has been sending out notices on the above named project this week.

Due to the good times always enjoyed at every dance given by the Post, most of the old friends were present and many new visitors were noticed who acclaimed that they would return on each favorable occasion.

Tinley Holy Name Society Sponsoring A Box Social

The Holy Name and Altar Society of the Tinley Park Catholic church, will sponsor an old time Pioneer Box Social, at the school auditorium Wednesday night January 23 at 8 o'clock, for the benefit of the Tinley Park school.

Do you recall those days of yore, how we would look forward to the annual box social at the little country school? And how we would dress up in a clean gingham apron and overalls! And after arriving, we would pry around to find out which box belonged to our best girl, so we could buy it and enjoy with her the goodies she placed inside. Well folks, that is what we are sponsoring at the Tinley Park school auditorium next Wednesday night.

We invite all the ladies and girls, no matter how small, in the community to fancy up and fill up with delicious goodies, a box, so that it might be auctioned to the highest bidder, for this worthy cause. The entire proceeds taken in, will be turned over to the Citizen's committee to be used toward keeping our school open during this period of distress.

Don't forget the date, and that you are to wear your overalls and gingham apron. Women and girls both are to bring boxes. We will have a Juvenile auction as well as adults.

The following will be the program for the evening: A 45 minute home talent program will open the evening, after which will follow the auctioning of the boxes. And when you have enjoyed the contents of your purchase, we will top the evening off with a little dancing.

There will be a five dollar door prize, popular lady contest and the price of admission is very small.

So come, all of you, and enjoy an evening of real fun.

ILLINOIS
State News

The body of Charles Moore, a retired farmer, was found frozen in the ice of a shallow ditch near Mattoon.

Despondent over unemployment, Frank Schneider, fifty-three, a plumber, shot and killed himself at his home in Lincoln.

Norman Burwinkle, fourteen, of Silvis died of a fractured skull received in a coasting accident. His sled was hit by a truck.

Mrs. Ruby Sullivan, thirty-seven, divorced wife of Ben Sullivan, Cherokee, Iowa, shot herself to death at her home in Benton.

Thomas A. Shaw, prominent resident of Tazewell county for 69 years, observed his one hundred and second birthday at his home in Mackinaw. He came to Illinois in 1857 and taught school near Clinton, where he was married in 1861 to Miss Serena C. Marrs. She died in 1911.

The Illinois milk commission, headed by Michael F. Henneberry of Joliet, sent a telegram to Henry A. Wallace, secretary of agriculture, urging him to take steps to increase the price paid to the dairy farmers for milk in the Chicago area. The commission pointed out in the message that present prices do not cover costs of production and that the financial condition of the dairy farmer is becoming deplorable.

Though determined that the temporarily unemployed be cared for, the people of Illinois are equally resolved that such relief shall not create a pauper class or a permanent dole. Gov. Henry Horner declared in delivering his second New Year's greeting. The governor spoke from his office in the executive mansion and his message was broadcast. He dwelt at length on the strides toward recovery made in state and nation in the last year.

State Representative Josephine Perry of the Fifth (Hyde Park, Kenwood, and Woodlawn) district in Chicago, a Republican, filed notice that she will contest her defeat for re-election last November 6. She will charge that she was defrauded of 9,000 votes. Miss Perry was fourth in the race of four candidates for the three seats in the house. Declared elected were William J. Warfield, Republican, and B. J. Kevin and Louis G. Bergman, Democrats.

Jobs for 5,761 students in Illinois colleges and universities will be provided in January through $86,415 of FERA funds, the Illinois emergency relief commission announced. The students will work for the colleges, performing part-time services not provided previously by regular and permanent employees. This is in continuance of the plan adopted in the spring of 1934 to help students, otherwise financially unable to attend college, to work their way. The University of Illinois has 1,130 students eligible for this work-aid. Latest figures, those for October, showed that 1,195 students were actually employed at the University of Illinois and that $17,446.68 was paid them. The services rendered vary from clerical and secretarial work to assistance in special research projects and in the preparation at the University of Chicago of the new dictionary. Three students at the University of Chicago were assigned to the publicity office to handle home-town news items. The maximum monthly salary is $20 and the average is $15.

With only $7,111,937 available, the Illinois Emergency Relief commission fixed its requirement for relief in the state during the month of January at $13,567,259. The previous high peak was that of November, when the state's total relief figure was $12,366,707. State funds now available to meet the record high January figure include $6,000,000 from the Federal Emergency Relief administration, which sounded a warning a month ago that the state must find substantial relief funds of its own by January 15. If the state complies with the FERA demand that it act to assure at least $3,000,000 monthly for relief in 1935, it is expected that the government will make up the remaining January deficit of several millions. Substantial progress during 1935 in solving the relief problem was predicted by Wilfred S. Reynolds, executive secretary of the commission. A survey showed that by the end of this month the commission will have spent $227,870,241 since taking charge of the relief situation in February, 1932. "I expect to see a decided reduction in the number of people on the rolls and in the amount of relief necessary for each relief family during 1935," said Mr. Reynolds. "Rays of hope have been visible for several months, in fact the increase from one month to the next has been much less than we experienced during previous winters."

Claire C. Edwards, for 16 years circuit judge of the Seventeenth judicial district and a life long resident of Lake county, died of heart disease in his home at Waukegan. Judge Edwards resigned from the bench in 1930 to take up the private practice of law.

Stanley Borowski, twenty-three, was stabbed to death after a dance in West City. Paul Sanders, eighteen, was accused of the stabbing. It is said Borowski had ejected Sanders from the dance hall. Borowski, employed in a coal mine at Fairmont, W. Va., was spending the holidays with his parents in Benton.

PETER FINDS DOTTY THE TREE SPARROW

HAVING been reminded of Dotty the Tree Sparrow, Peter Rabbit was eager to find him and learn how he had fared through the summer. He was at a loss just where to look for Dotty until he remembered a certain weedy field, along one edge of which the bushes had been left growing.

So Peter hurried over to the weedy field and there, sure enough, he found Dotty and a lot of his friends. They were very busy getting their breakfast. Some were clinging to the weed stalks picking the seeds out of the tops, while others were picking up seeds from the ground. It was cold; Rough Brother North Wind was doing his best to blow up a snow storm. It wasn't at all the kind of a day when anybody would expect to find anyone in high spirits, but Dotty was. He was even singing as Peter came up, and all about Dotty's friends and relatives were twittering as merrily as if it were the beginning of spring instead of winter.

Dotty was very nearly the size of

He wore a chestnut cap, almost exactly like that of Chippy the Chipping Sparrow. It reminded Peter that Dotty is often called the Winter Chippy.

"Welcome back," cried Peter. "It does my heart good to see you!" "Thank you, Peter," twittered Dotty happily. "In a way, it is good to be back. Certainly it is good to know an old friend is glad to see me."

"Well, it IS good," declared Peter very emphatically. "At best there are few enough folks about in winter, and I don't know of anyone I enjoy having for a neighbor more than I do you."

"Thank you again," cried Dotty, "and please let me return the compliment. I like cold weather. I like winter when there isn't too much ice and stormy weather. I always feel good when it is cold. That is one reason I go north to nest."

"Speaking of nests, do you build in a tree?" inquired Peter.

"Usually on or near the ground," replied Dotty. "Really I am a ground bird, although I am called a tree sparrow. Most of us sparrows spend our

TOMORROW

By ANNE CAMPBELL

THE future may be dark with certain sorrow,
But I will walk a valiant way.
I will not take the burden of tomorrow
Upon my heart today.

I will not lift a sack of phantom troubles
From a remembered year,
And bear their bogus weight. Like silver bubbles
They soon would disappear.

I am content today! Why should I borrow
From Fate I cannot stay?
I will not take the burden of tomorrow
Upon my heart today.

COLORFUL DISHES

THIS is the time of the year when entertaining is done for the young folks, when colorful and interesting dishes are more appreciated.

Chrysanthemum Salad.

Take bright thin-skinned oranges, wash, cut the skins from the blossom end to the stem end, but not quite through, leaving a small portion to hold the petals in shape. Cut into points to resemble a flower. Carefully remove the pulp, not to break the flower. Cut the pulp into small pieces, draining off the juices to add to the dressing. To eight oranges take one apple finely diced, two tablespoons of lemon juice poured over it to keep it from discoloring, add two tablespoonfuls of sugar, one-half cupful of diced celery and one-half cupful of broken nuts. Arrange the cups on lettuce, fill with the salad mixture, adding mayonnaise and seasoning to taste, using the orange juice instead of cream to add to the mayonnaise.

Cranberry Orange Salad.

Prepare molds of cranberry sauce. Arrange in the center of a nest of lettuce and place thin slices of orange around the mold. Top the cranberry with a rose of mayonnaise and place a candied cranberry on each slice of orange.

Roast Turkey.

Cut strips of fat salt pork and cover the breast of a firm, plump turkey or other fowl. After stuffing place in roaster and brown. During the baking baste every fifteen minutes with orange juice and lemon juice. Add two teaspoonfuls of lemon juice to a cupful of orange juice while basting. Use the liquid in the pan also for basting. The fruit juice enhances the flavor, making it more tender.

Prepare and bake a plain sponge cake in a square tin. When cool cut into rounds with a cookie cutter and cover with any creamy frosting. Roll in tinted coconut. Decorate with halves of nuts, sliced dates arranged in design or with bits of maraschino cherries or candied fruit.

Simultaneously, the author, her husband and I drew our chairs closer to the fireplace, above which burned dim lights from Chinese furniture, which she favors.

"Seven years ago," she began, "I read an obscure notice in the newspaper, about John Hulbert, of Auburn, N. Y., an electrician, resigning as executioner at Sing Sing, because he was being ostracized from society. At the same time he justified his job, saying he was only fulfilling his work as a servant of the state."

"I thought this was a grand idea for a story. I wrote a story about an electrician, who was ostracized by his family and friends, because they found out he was serving as an executioner and who eventually killed himself because of their actions, by seizing a high-voltage electric wire. I sold the story to a magazine."

"A few months later the editor called me to say that the owner of the magazine felt that my story was a plea against capital punishment and that he did not feel that his magazine should take issue on the subject. I should keep my check, but the story would not be published by them; I could resell it if I wished."

"I let the matter drift, although I felt that I wanted to see the story published."

"One morning, two years later, my secretary handed me a paper."

"Look," she cried, with amazement in her voice.

"Joins in death the 140 men he slew," said the headlines. "John Hulbert, by suicide, answers the question all who knew him asked."

"How I rejoiced that my story had not been published! I would always have been haunted by the thought that Hulbert had read my story and brooded over it, and had eventually committed suicide."

"In view of the strange finale of events, the magazine then published the story, and I rejoiced that I have been saved from that ghost."

"I WAS born in a haunted house," related the comic artist, Percy Crosby.

"The first gleam of consciousness which I can remember in my life was seeing a colored mammy under the kitchen table, and hearing my mother say that the mammy was a ghost. All through my childhood I can remember my mother complaining to my father that our house was haunted, until, when I was three, we had to move from it."

"I can remember vividly that first experience—the only time I ever saw the ghost. It left an indelible impression on my mind."

"I had gone into the kitchen to get a cookie. Under the kitchen table I saw a negro mammy; a red bandanna was tied tightly around her head, her two hands were on the floor. She seemed to be backing away from me. I screamed in fright at the strange sight and ran to my mother."

"Mother grasped my hand, and took me back to the scene. The woman was still crouching there."

"I saw my mother slap at her, and her hand went right through her head and struck the wall; and the mammy disappeared."

"'Ghost, ghost!' screamed my mother. I screamed also, not knowing what the word meant."

"Mother called witnesses who agreed that there was no sign or hide or hair of the mammy in the room. I was with her to testify that she had been there, and that when mother struck her she disappeared."

"After that experience my mother grew more nervous and timid; but, like all small boys, the experience only gave me more courage, and more ideas for adventure. But I have never found a ghost since that time. No doubt since I was born in a haunted house, I'll probably die in one."

Farmers War on Lark

Even if Shelley wrote an ode about it and Schubert was inspired by it to compose a beautiful melody, the lark is just a bird that damages wheat and other crops. So declare the farmers in the vicinity of Norfolk, England, and they have started a war on the songster. The Norfolk Agricultural committee has excluded the bird from the new order under the wild birds protection act.

Collapse Reveals Secret Tunnel

Not known previously to exist, a brick-lined tunnel six feet high, ten feet wide and about ten feet below the surface of the road and believed to be over one hundred years old, collapsed at Sheffield, England, while workmen were preparing foundations for a garage.

"I—I—was wondering if what I heard—"

"What did you hear?"

The three questions were perfectly synchronized as the men closed in. Jean's lips quivered nervously.

"I really didn't go to the gun room to listen, Uncle Rod, and I kept my fingers in my ears a long time, honest. I went there to—"

"Never mind what you went there for. What did you hear?"

With anxious eyes roving from one face to the other, Jean told of the conversation between Walter Gerard and Len Calloway.

"I heard my father say, 'It's a payment on delivery proposition, Len? Sure?'"

"Tell me again, what time were they to meet?"

"At eight, Uncle Rod."

Gerard glanced at the clock. "We can make the smithy before that time easy in my roadster, Jim."

"Better pass the cattle barn first. We will leave Dave there to make his friendly call, then we'll go on and catch the conspirators red-handed."

Jean caught her uncle's arm. Her eyes were frightened.

"You won't hurt Father, will you? Perhaps I shouldn't have told—but I was afraid he might be making trouble for you and—Mr. David."

"A big tear rolled down her cheek, her breath caught in a sob—but Miss Prue said—"

"Prue! Did you tell her this same story?"

Surprise dried Jean's tears. "Of course, Uncle Rod. I tell her everything. What makes you so white?"

"What did she say, K. K. Quick, tell us everything."

"First she guessed Mr. Calloway had hired Father to boss a lumber crew—then she said perhaps they were planning a party for Milly Gooch—"

"Cut that. What else did Prue say? Hurry!"

"She didn't say much more, except to ask me where the blacksmith shop was."

Gerard crossed the room to the telephone, and waited.

"Can't you get the house, Rodney?" David asked.

Gerard replaced the telephone. "No answer. He cleared his voice of huskiness. 'This is movie night—she may have gone—that's a thought.'"

He picked up the phone again and gave the Puffers' number. Impulsive as she was, Prue couldn't have done such a mad thing as to go to the old blacksmith shop, he told himself. But suppose she had?

"Keep on ringing, operator. Important."

"I'm making a break for the cattle barn, Rod."

Gerard nodded response to Armstrong's husky voice. Boy! How white he was! White. If he was so anxious about the girl to whom he was engaged, why waste a minute on that infernal crew? Why not make a break for the smithy?

"Pull yourself together!" he gritted his teeth. "It's just your crazy idea that Prue has gone to the shop. Probably Jim knows her too well to think she'd do such a fool thing."

He laid down the phone. "No answer, Dave."

Color stole back into Schuyler's face. "She has gone to the movies with the Puffers and Jane Mack of course. Let's get going, Rodney. If you mean to make the blacksmith shop before eight, we will have to hustle."

"We'll hustle, all right. Good-night, K. K. Go to bed and to sleep."

"You—you—won't be too hard on Father, Uncle Rod?"

Gerard managed a smile. "Of course not. Why should I be? Miss Prue is right; probably Calloway has given him a job to boss a lumber crew. Be a good child. Don't worry. Let's get going, Dave!"

Neither man spoke as the black roadster raced along trailing a cloud of snow like the wake of a vessel. The tumult in Gerard's mind quieted. He certainly had had a brainstorm back in the living room. Of course Prue wouldn't go to the smithy. What did she really care about the firm of Schuyler and Gerard? Not a hang. Jim Armstrong was her—

"I feel as if I ought to apologize to Prue,"—he cut in on his own conclusions—"for even thinking she would do such a dumb thing as to try to get to that shop."

"Do you? I don't. She would do that if she thought she could help. What's all the shouting for? Hear it? Must be the crew at the cattle barn."

"Hear it! It would rouse the Seven Sleepers. They are yelling now. Sound to me like an able-bodied riot with a fight or two thrown in for good measure. Step on the gas, Rodney. I haven't helped much in the woods, but I can stop that."

The roadster sped on. The uproar increased. Gerard peered through the windshield. Something might be in the road—might be!

He ground on the emergency brake with a suddenness which flung them both against the unshatterable windshield.

"What—"

Rodney Gerard was out of the roadster before David Schuyler could finish the sentence jerked out of him by the shock. He stared at the bulk sprawled across the road. A truck. Not one of his. Where had it come from to be on the pond road at this time of night?

"What the dickens is it, Rodney?" David Schuyler peered over his shoulder.

"A truck. Gone blooey. Not one of ours. That smash didn't just happen in this spot. I'll bet it's a plant. Calloway and Walt conspiring! What's the big idea? If it were our truck, the answer would be easy—holding up our shipment; but a strange—" He sniffed. "Oh, my gosh! Smell it!"

David Schuyler, who had been bending over the wreck, straightened.

"Smell it! I'll say I smell it. What master-mind conceived the scheme of wrecking that load of liquor in front of the bunk-house? We must keep my boys from finding this."

"Judging from the sounds of whoopee ahead, I'd say we were several hours too late. What a dirty trick! What a damnable dirty trick! Who's coming? Whoever it is won't get any more."

He picked up a bottle which had escaped breakage. "Clever guys. They didn't have the stuff cased. Just handed it to our crew all ready to drink." He swung his arm experimentally. "I haven't done much at head-cracking lately, but I'll do my darndest with this."

David Schuyler seized the bottle. "Wait till you see the whites of his eyes, Rodney."

The light touch eased the tension. Gerard had been so angry that he wouldn't have cared where or how he hit; now his mouth was stretched in a grin. His muscles tightened. Who was coming?

"Rod! Rod!"

The sharp call was barely audible above the din in the bunk-house. Jim Armstrong! Of course! Gerard dropped the bottle. It cracked like a pistol shot.

"Rod! Rod! It's Jim! Put up your gun!"

Gerard laughed as Armstrong's face shone weirdly white in the glare of the roadster's lights.

"Haven't a gun. No such luck. That crack was a bottle passing out. Come on, Dave. Let's get round this mess so we can talk to Jim without yelling our heads off."

When they reached Armstrong, he shouted to make his voice carry above the din in the bunk-house.

"I beat it across lots on the short-cut trail. The men were raising the roof when I reached the bunk-house. I snapped in on their wild party. Had just time to see that they'd pulled blankets off the bunks, had scattered balsam boughs which served for mattresses all over the place, when a shower of tin cups deluged me—hadn't supposed there were that many in the world. The crowd roared as I backed out. I know when I'm in a hopeless minority. They've been fairly good-natured. Perhaps they will get sleepy and quiet down."

Gerard glanced at his wrist watch. "I'll give them two minutes; then I am going in. Think I will stand out—"

Color stole back into Schuyler's face. "She has gone to the movies with the Puffers and Jane Mack of course. Let's get going, Rodney. If you mean to make the blacksmith shop before eight, we will have to hustle."

"We'll hustle, all right. Good-night, K. K. Go to bed and to sleep."

"You—you—won't be too hard on Father, Uncle Rod?"

Gerard managed a smile. "Of course not. Why should I be? Miss Prue is right; probably Calloway has given him a job to boss a lumber crew. Be a good child. Don't worry. Let's get going, Dave!"

Neither man spoke as the black roadster raced along trailing a cloud of snow like the wake of a vessel. The tumult in Gerard's mind quieted. He certainly had had a brainstorm back in the living room. Of course Prue wouldn't go to the smithy. What did she really care about the firm of Schuyler and Gerard? Not a hang. Jim Armstrong was her—

"I feel as if I ought to apologize to Prue,"—he cut in on his own conclusions—"for even thinking she would do such a dumb thing as to try to get to that shop."

"Do you? I don't. She would do that if she thought she could help. What's all the shouting for? Hear it? Must be the crew at the cattle barn."

"Hear it! It would rouse the Seven Sleepers. They are yelling now. Sound to me like an able-bodied riot with a fight or two thrown in for good measure. Step on the gas, Rodney. I haven't helped much in the woods, but I can stop that."

The roadster sped on. The uproar increased. Gerard peered through the windshield. Something might be in the road—might be!

He ground on the emergency brake with a suddenness which flung them both against the unshatterable windshield.

"What—"

"Who says so?"

Gerard recognized the burly brute who lurched forward as one of the two men who had deserted to Calloway. Had he driven and dumped the truck?

"Always merry and bright, aren't you, Kusciko? Keep back! You're not in this! I'll talk with my own men."

"Sez he! He's givin' you the razzberry. You guys back there goin' to be told what you can do when you're not on the job?"

The men surged forward. Their muttering was an angry undertone to the bedlam in the bunk-house. Gerard counted. Eleven of them against three. Armstrong and Schuyler had closed in behind him. Why didn't they stay out of it? This was his fight. His and Calloway's. That last name steeled his muscles. Somewhere Len was gloating over the situation, might even now be looking on. He stepped forward. The shouting and singing inside the bunk-house ceased suddenly. The world was weirdly quiet; he could hear the hiss of a meteor overhead.

"Quit this fool business and go back, men. If you don't you'll lose your jobs tomorrow."

"Yeah! Listen, you guys!" Kusciko swayed forward and leered into Gerard's face. "Who'll this fella you call the Big Boss get to finish the job if he gives you your time? Let's teach this white-collar gent to keep out of other guys' business when the day's work's done. What's he here for—"

Gerard caught the braggart by the collar of his plaid shirt, dragged him from his feet, and with stupendous effort flung him among the men.

"That's what I'm here for!" The words gitted between clamped teeth. "Anyone else want to know?"

For an instant the crowd hesitated, then with a concerted growl it lunged forward. Gerard's blood chilled. Ugly faces. Cruel faces. What would it feel like to be torn to pieces. A man died but once. He wasn't a man if he let a lot of dirty drunks tell him where to get off. His eyes narrowed. Which head would he punch first? He doubled his fist. He'd begin on that chinless mug and make it noseless.

Boy! What a crack! He got his man. Northwest mounted stuff. Why didn't Jim keep out of this?

"Look out!"

Someone yanked him aside, someone struck something that glittered out of Kusciko's hand. It lay, long and keen and cruel, on the trampled snow.

"Keep out of this, Rodney," David Schuyler pulled him back. "Quit pounding that man, Jim. This is my job now."

He walked toward the silent men who, jaws dropped, stared at him with bleared eyes.

"Your little joke has gone far enough, boys." He clamped his foot down on the glittering knife. His voice was steel in a velvet sheath. "Nothing doing, Kusciko!"

The man, who had crawled forward, glared at him from his knees and snatched back his dirty hand.

"Spiritual force against brute force. I seem to remember that as a noble experiment in a far-off country," panted Jim Armstrong at Gerard's shoulder.

Rodney nodded without moving his eyes from the group ahead. Every muscle was tense, he was ready to spring if a hand were laid on David Schuyler. The cool voice went on.

"McGowen, roll Kusciko in the snow. Cool him off. Better all of you play Polar Bear. You—"

"Hi there!" yelled a man on the steps of the bunk-house. "Bring along that—"

Shouts behind him drowned his words. The sounds of scuffling followed, then a crash. Ominous silence for a second. Then yells of fright. One voice pierced the tumult:

"Look out! The stove! Fire! Fire!"

"I'll take care of the snooper hiding in here!"

At Calloway's harsh threat Prudence flung herself flat on the dirty floor behind the wood pile.

A light on the wall! How soon would Calloway grab her? It was coming her way! Had she better crawl out and appear nonchalant? Nearer! Nearer—a door banging!

The lean-to went pitch-black.

"Tried to walk out on me, have you, Walt? You—Milly! What are you doing here?" It was Calloway's voice, shaken, ugly.

"You tell me."

"You'll tell me. Where's Walt Gerard?"

In his surprise the snooper in the lean-to had been forgotten. Prudence tiptoed to the door. It was like looking at a scene in a play. Calloway held the lantern high; the motion of his unsteady hand sent a little whirl of drab smoke against the glass chimney. His black eyes glittered in the wavering light as he scowled at Milly Gooch perched on the forge.

"Gosh, I'm tired from that tramp here. Don't walk much. My feet ache like a tooth gone nery."

"Why did you come? Has Walt Gerard double-crossed me? You'll tell me, and you'll tell me quick."

Milly Gooch glanced at him from between half-closed lids. She flicked ashes from her cigarette.

Calloway set the lantern on the forge beside her. "Now look here, Milly,"—his tone was propitiatory—"I'm a just man—"

"Nothing else but—"

She slipped to her feet. With incredible swiftness she reached the door and bolted it. Backed against it she thrust her hands into the pockets of her coat. Her eyes looked enormous as she defied him.

"You're so just, Len, that of course you won't mind staying right here till you've told me what dirty deal you and Walt Gerard are putting across."

Calloway's glance flashed to the double doors. Prudence's blood tingled. He was planning escape that way, was he? To her surprise, instead of turning purple with anger and blustering, he shrugged and put one foot up on the stool. Elbow on his knee, he swung the lantern in his free hand as he faced Milly Gooch.

"I'm not kicking—with you to look at."

"Quick on the uptake, aren't you? What's the racket? Have you two been making trouble for Roddy?"

Her voice caught in the middle of the name. Prue's nails cut into her hands. It didn't take much perception to realize that Milly Gooch loved Rodney Gerard.

"Trouble for Roddy! Trouble for—Just a little, just a little."

Calloway's repetition was ugly. He kicked away the stool and approached Milly Gooch. He was angry and he was cornered. A menace to the person who crossed him. Prudence squeezed herself between the forge and the wall. She couldn't let that other girl fight alone. Had she been heard? Had she been seen? She held her breath. No. They were too absorbed in each other.

"I told you when you threw me over for him that I would make him pay, didn't I? First he stole my girl—"

"Meaning me? I never was your girl!"

"Engaged to me, weren't you? What do you call that?"

"Guess you mesmerized me. I jumped through the wrong hoop, that's all. Gosh, I don't know why. Suppose Roddy—suppose I did like Roddy better, are you going round making trouble for every man a girl likes better than you? You'd better move to the desert."

"That isn't all Rodney Gerard has done! He has come between me and business. He is cutting timber that it's my right to cut. I would have winked at that if he hadn't already taken you away from me."

"Don't cry, Len," Milly Gooch murmured.

He caught her shoulder. "Now he's set Prudence Schuyler against me."

New York Buildings

The Empire State building is 1,248 feet high; building began in February, 1930, and it was opened on May 1, 1931. Elevators run to the observatory on the eighty-sixth floor; from there two elevators run to a special gallery, 1,210 feet above the street level, and there is a 12-foot stairway above this to another observation platform.

Radio City covers three large city blocks, between Fifth and Sixth avenues and Forty-eighth to Fifty-first streets; the surface area is 503,875 square feet, or almost 12 acres. There are 12 building units, ranging from six to 70 stories in height in the entire project.

Lesson for January 20

PETER'S LESSON IN HUMBLE SERVICE

LESSON TEXT—John 13:1-17; I Peter 5:5.

GOLDEN TEXT—Likewise, ye younger, submit yourselves unto the elder. Yea, all of you be subject one to another, and be clothed with humility; for God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble.—I Peter 5:5.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Why Jesus Washed Peter's Feet.

JUNIOR TOPIC—How Peter Learned a New Lesson.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—The Dignity of Lowly Service.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Serving Christ Through Serving Others.

1. Christ's Amazing Love for His Own (vv. 1-3).

Jesus was fully conscious of what was immediately before him. He knew that the cross, with all its shame and anguish, was upon him; he knew that his disciples would shamefully forsake him in a few hours; he knew that one of that number would be the instrument in the hands of the devil in his betrayal; he was fully conscious of his Dearly; he knew that all things were in his hands. He did not withdraw his love from them because of their weakness and the shameful failure which he knew would soon be made manifest. He not only loved them to the end of his earthly ministry, but loved them unto the "utmost." The word "end" means "utmost." Love to the utmost therefore means that he bestowed upon them his love, even to the extent of taking their place in death.

2. Christ Washing the Disciples' Feet (vv. 4-11).

He did not regard his hands too holy to do this menial service. The true Christian does not allow his rank in society to keep him from acts of lowly service.

1. Steps in this service (vv. 4-6).

a. He rose from supper.

b. Laid aside his garments.

c. Took a towel and girded himself.

d. Poured water into a basin.

e. Washed his disciples' feet.

f. Wiped them with the towel where-with he was girded.

These steps symbolize Christ's entire work of redemption. His rising from supper represents his rising from his place of enjoyment in the heavenly glory. His laying aside his garments symbolized his putting aside his vesture of majesty (Phil. 2:7, 8). His girding himself symbolized his taking the form of a servant (Phil. 2:7). The water in the basin symbolized his cleansing blood; his washing of the disciples' feet, his actual cleansing of them through his word (John 15:3; Eph. 5:26); his taking his garments again, his returning to his place and position in glory.

2. Peter's impetuous ignorance (vv. 6-9). When he realized what the Lord was doing, he refused to have his feet washed; when he realized the peril of refusal, he desired to be fully washed.

3. The significance of this service to those participating in it (vv. 8-11).

a. It is a spiritual cleansing (v. 8). Fellowship with Jesus is possible only as we are continuously cleansed from our sins (v. 10). The cleansing here is not the washing of regeneration, but that of sanctification. He that is regenerated, that is, washed in the blood of Christ (symbolized by baptism) does not need a repetition of the act; he only needs the cleansing of sanctification, symbolized by the washing of the feet. After regeneration the believer is contaminated by his sins as he walks through this world. Christ's blood cleanses of all sins those who confess them.

b. A badge of brotherly affection (v. 14). This act showed Christ's abandonment to the service of his disciples. It is a lesson much needed today. We need more and more to practice brotherly love.

c. An expression of humility (v. 15). This was a lesson much needed by the disciples, and much needed by us today. They had just been disputing as to who should be the greatest in the kingdom. Thus their selfish ambition was expressing itself. On every hand we see manifestations of pride, vanity, and even arrogance, of those who are professed followers of the lowly Jesus.

d. Equalization (v. 16). The disciples thus stooping to serve each other in the name of Jesus Christ will have burned out of them the caste spirit.

III. An Example for Us (vv. 14-17). The disciples of the Lord are under solemn obligation in the spirit of humility to serve each other, even as Christ served his disciples. This obligation rests upon his Lordship (v. 14). To refuse obedience to him is to set oneself above his Lord. The way to happiness is implicit obedience to the Lord.

Stop and Listen

Do we not sometimes feel, in trial or perplexity, that others might help us if they would only stop and listen? But they will not, and in their constant hurry we know it is little use to speak. Let us quote the lesson for ourselves, and give what we ask.

The Voice of the American Legion

By The Tinley Park Post No. 615

TO END SOON IN VICTORY LEGION'S LONG CAMPAIGN

Washington.—The American Legion's long fight for the adoption of a universal service law, one of the most effective measures for preserving peace ever devised and yet an important element in an adequate national defense program, seems certain to end victoriously in Congress this winter.

The decision of President Roosevelt to appoint a special commission to draft legislation, which the administration will sponsor, just about clinched a victory that probably already was won. However, with this added support, Congressional leaders express the opinion that there remains no doubt about the passage of a bill such as the Legion has proposed since its inception.

As a result, one of the Legion's primary objectives for 1935 already is achieved. The paramount legislative program includes a mandate for the adoption of the Universal Service Act, providing for the conscription of capital, industry and manpower in time of war; and the use of each in the service of the nation without special preference or profit.

Whether the plan to be drafted by General Douglas MacArthur, Brig. Gen. Hugh Johnson and Bernard Baruch will be the one finally adopted depends largely upon the nature of its provisions, in the opinion of leaders at Capitol Hill. The program generally favored by members of Congress is the one which effectively removing profits from the business of war. By taking the profits out of war, the Legion plan destroys automatically one of the greatest incentives for war.

Regardless of whose name is attached to the bill as it is adopted, the consensus of opinion everywhere is that the credit for its adoption will belong solely to the American Legion. When the World War ended and the veterans associated themselves together in the Legion, one of the first things they determined was that the profiteering that went on at the expense of the country and the men who did the fighting should never be repeated in a future conflict. From that moment the Legion began its campaign to take the profits out of war.

At the Kansas City Convention in 1921, studies of the previous two years were translated into action by a demand for Congressional action. A special committee, with the advice of some of the nation's best qualified military and economic experts, made a careful survey, including the experiences of France, Britain, and Germany during the war and a complete review of war-time legislation in this country. As a result, the Capper-Johnson Bill, embodying the Legion's recommendations, was introduced.

Congress was afraid of the legislation at first and from 1922 through 1926 it got no further than hearings before Congressional committees. President Harding, and President Coolidge, however, both advocated such protection and later it was included in the platforms of both of the major political parties at their national conventions. The Legion kept pressing its case until, on June 27, 1930, President Hoover signed its resolution creating a joint commission to study the proposal in its entirety. Thus, after eight years of steady fighting, the first major objective was attained.

On March 3, 1932, the commission made its report and this was transmitted to Congress on March 7, 1932. It requested the following legislative steps: (1) governmental authority to fix prices at the inception of war; (2) confiscation of 95 per cent of all war incomes above normal, so that funds escaping the freezing of prices would be diverted back to paying the cost of war; (3) a constitutional amendment specifically giving to Congress the authority to control prices in war-time.

Capper Praises Legion
The next major step toward enactment of legislation came last April 12, when the Senate adopted the Nye-Vandenberg resolution, creating a special committee to review the findings of the commission and investigate war profiteering. This resolution, out of which has grown the expose of activities of munitions makers, officially gives credit to the Legion for the entire undertaking by stating in its title that it was approved in response "to the long-standing demands of American war veterans speaking through The American Legion for legislation to take the profit out of war."

Senator Arthur Capper, of Kansas, co-author of the first Legion bill introduced on the subject, in a national and international radio broadcast, reminded the public that it was the Legion which originated and carried through to victory the whole program, saying:

"A legislative program for taking the profit out of war will be presented to Congress in January. This idea originated in 1921 with the American Legion. The Legion measure provides for universal conscription of capital and industry with youth and manpower in time of war, without special preference of profit. We hope that other governments will expose the infamies of war profiteering and that in no distant time all governments will find common ground for ending it."

Shaft Would Have Value

It is strange that an expedition into the earth's interior has never been seriously attempted. If we could sink a shaft only twelve miles into the ground we might strike all the coal and oil that would be needed in millions of years. In all likelihood we should find radium, gold, silver, diamonds, and other gems of untold wealth, as well as wonderful new metals and fresh sources of energy.—Exchange.

Correction: Bill Devlin says he doesn't want to take out a Freshman girl. It must be a sophomore. Grace Moriarty is also wearing a wedding ring with the other ring. Who got Russell Nelson's pass to the game Friday night? Why was Bob Nieman so anxious to get out of the shower room after the game Friday night?

It is rumored Bernice Hostert walked home alone. Miss Vail had been trying to show the sophomore botany class proof of the theory of evolution in the development of plant ferns; Miss Vail in the sophomore English class; "And what does this show proof of?" Margaret Muehler: "Evolution." What sophomore boy is said to do his courting during school hours and by what means? What do the initials W. L. or H. B. mean to Kathryn Erickson? Where should one look for Virginia Brown during lunch period? It might help to know that Robert is sitting outside in his V8. Who or what makes Bernice Hostert forget the lines of the Health Motto to be memorized for Physiology Class?

Smartness This Pajama Keynote

PATTERN 2045

There is no reason why pajamas should not be as smart as anything else a woman wears—and every reason why they should. Here are some that are as carefully designed as a suit. Look at the way that girly business mounts in a becoming V in the front and ties in a clever bow in the back, emphasizing the slender lines of the waist. Those tiny revers are exactly the finish it needs at the neck, and the well-cut trousers are both comfortable and good looking. It is, of course, a two-piece model, nice to make in a neatly patterned cotton or a plain or figured flannel or challis.

Pattern 2045 is available in sizes 12, 14, 16, 18 and 20. Size 16 takes 4 1/2 yards 36 inch fabric. Illustrated step-by-step sewing instructions included.

Washington.—Now that the President has laid before congress his request for the new appropriations, financial students are wondering more and more when the end of this government spending is to come. It will be remembered that Mr. Roosevelt said a year ago that the total public debt should not exceed $31,834,000,000 and that that figure should be reached around June 30, 1935. When it is considered that the present public debt exceeds $28,500,000,000, it becomes difficult to understand how the President will succeed in sticking to his original assertion to hold the national debt at the figure named.

The Treasury department has just released its annual report and this reveals an increase in the public debt of approximately six billion dollars since June 30, 1933, an eighteen months' record. It has made the total cost of the recovery spending program aggregate something over twelve billion dollars since January 1, 1931, when the spending spree really began. To make the vast amount more readily comprehensible, if you take the time to figure it out you will find that the government has been spending borrowed money at the rate of almost twenty-three thousand dollars a minute in the last four years. To illustrate further the magnitude of this sum a figure expert here has calculated that there has been about one billion minutes since the birth of Christ and, therefore, the federal government in the last four years has added about twelve dollars to the public debt for each of the minutes since Christ came on earth.

But to get back to the present plan, presentation of the budget with its maximum outlay of around seven billion dollars recalled to some leaders the assertion by the President respecting the topmost limit for the public debt. In the budget message which he presented just a year ago Mr. Roosevelt boldly stated his belief that "the government should seek to hold the public debt" to the figure of $31,834,000,000.

"Furthermore," he added, "the government during the balance of this calendar year should plan to bring its 1936 expenditures including recovery and relief within the revenues expected in the fiscal year 1936." The fiscal year 1936 begins next July 1. And frequent pronouncements from the White House have made it clear that a balanced budget in that time is quite unlikely. In addition, the treasury said in its annual report that taxes always lagged behind in reflecting recovery of the country. For example, income taxes to be paid on March 15, 1936, and in the subsequent installments of that year will be the result of levies on earnings of the current calendar year. No one expects earnings in 1935 to be normal. It is obvious, therefore, that the balancing of the budget in the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1935, becomes almost a physical impossibility unless the President should do the unexpected by cutting off every one of the sixty-five or more recovery and relief agencies and should cut off all federal funds for relief of the destitute. If that were done, it is estimated by fiscal experts that ordinary receipts by the treasury would come close to meeting the ordinary cost of the regularly established governmental agencies.

There had been frequent contentions by avid New Dealers that Mr. Roosevelt's second budget recommendations would provide a clear picture of his general picture of the fiscal policies. If their statements remain true, they resulted in setting up one of the most paradoxical conditions in the history of this nation. Looking back over the whole Roosevelt period, the thing which observers have never been able adequately to explain is who or what effected the change in the President's views on fundamental financial questions. It is too obvious to precipitate an argument that the President's views have changed. When one goes back to his first message to congress or beyond that to his campaign speeches and the platform upon which he made the race for the Presidency, it is futile to attempt to reconcile those utterances with the subsequent spending and borrowing program in which his administration has indulged. It will be recalled that Mr. Roosevelt declared in his inaugural speech an intention to balance the budget and wipe out the deficit left on his lap by the Hoover administration. He went on to say that if congress in its generosity voted sums that placed the budget out of balance it was under the necessity at the same time to provide taxes to raise the excess expenditures.

Since there can be no dispute that Mr. Roosevelt's views have changed and he has acted in accordance with his new found principles, the interesting thing is who brought about the revision of views on the part of the President. Some of the President's virulent critics have asserted in the opening days of congress that Mr. Roosevelt was wholly uninformed as to the needs with which he was confronted when he was making his campaign speeches. They say he found his original promise to be all wet and he took the only alternative to stave off a bitter row in his own party, offering much money for congress to spend.

Among the President's friends, I have heard private expressions that Mr. Roosevelt had been misled by some of the group who held his ear at the start of the administration. These men referred to a number of the so-called Progressive Republicans like the LaFollettes, Norris, Hiram Johnson of California, and Bronson Cutting of New Mexico. Several of these were so well liked by the President that they were invited to enter his cabinet. Consequently, there are those who believe that Mr. Roosevelt followed the advice of the Progressive Republican group much more closely than leaders among the old-time Democrats. Most of the Progressive Republicans are spenders at heart, according to the general view here. And they are also men who regard a balanced budget as not very important. So, while no one can say definitely what influences altered the President's stand, it certainly is regarded among observers here as being a situation in which the wind makes the straws point toward the so-called progressives as having joined hands with the President in initiating what has come to be the greatest outpouring of taxpayers' money, except in war time, since our government was established.

Organization of the new congress has resulted in a new cry, in reality a very old cry, but it is new, since we have not heard it in fifteen years. The cry we are hearing now from Republicans and from northern Democrats is the wall that "the South is in the saddle."

While there certainly can be nothing criminal about the South being in the saddle, it provides a grand political issue both within the Democratic ranks and between the Democratic party and what is left of the Republicans in congress. It also touches a question that has been discussed many times, namely, the wisdom of the seniority rule in congress. The seniority rule provides that the oldest members in the point of service shall inherit committee chairmanships and shall have other positions of honor in the house and senate.

Out of the 69 Democratic senators only 24 come from what is known as the solid South. Of the 317 Democratic members of the house, only about 100 are thoroughly acquainted with the yell of the Confederacy. Yet in the face of this tremendous growth of Democratic membership coming out of the North and the West, the South is in the saddle more solidly than ever.

The speakership of the house went to Representative Byrns of Tennessee, who succeeded to the place made vacant by the late Henry T. Rainey of Illinois. Mr. Byrns had been Democratic leader and his promotion left a vacancy to which Representative Will Bankhead of Alabama was elected, thus moving leadership further to the South. The only plum, if it be a plum, that went north of the Mason and Dixon line was the selection of Representative O'Connor of New York, as chairman of the rules committee.

In the senate we see Vice President Garner, the presiding officer, a Texan. The majority leader is Senator Robinson of Arkansas. The powerful committee on finance is presided over by Harrison of Mississippi; the senate committee on banking and currency is controlled by Fletcher of Florida; and the committee on agriculture is headed by Smith of South Carolina. One could go on and name many others although I believe the consensus is that the seniority rule has not worked to produce as many duds for senate committee chairmanships as has occurred in the house.

Democratic leaders in the house have made certain that they will not be embarrassed this year as they were in the first New Deal congress. In that session they were constantly harassed by the radicals who sought to force votes on legislation which the President and his advisers did not want and which for the same reason the Democratic leaders did not want. The radicals accomplished their purposes by use of what is called the rule of discharge of committees. But that rule has been amended so that to invoke it now, actually a majority of the house will have to sign a petition.

Under the previous rule, the signature of 145 members of the house was sufficient to compel the discharge of a committee from consideration of any piece of legislation referred to it for action. The necessary number of signatures was obtained in three embarrassing cases last year. The soldiers' bonus bill was brought out by that method; the Frazier-Lemke farm mortgage inflation bill was released for a house vote in the same manner.

The new house organization, however, is determined not to be embarrassed in that manner. It succeeded in Democratic caucus—binding on all Democrats—in having the original rule amended so that now there must be a majority of all house members affixing their signatures to the discharge petition before it becomes operative.

Since there can be no dispute that Mr. Roosevelt's views have changed and he has acted in accordance with his new found principles, the interesting thing is who brought about the revision of views on the part of the President. Some of the President's virulent critics have asserted in the opening days of congress that Mr. Roosevelt was wholly uninformed as to the needs with which he was confronted when he was making his campaign speeches. They say he found his original promise to be all wet and he took the only alternative to stave

Expect Census to Show Changes in Population

The census of agriculture, which will be taken early this year, may be expected to reveal many and important changes in land tenure in the United States and even show a violent disturbance in the balance between rural and urban population. Signs of the times that have been persisting since the last farm census point the way. The 1930 census was taken in the twilight of an industrial prosperity that has had few rivals and well along in the depths of farm despondency that also stands out in history. The backward march from population centers to the farm had not started in force. So the population count of 1930 was made at what was very close to the peak of the ascendancy of urban population over rural.

A similar count for the forthcoming census will reveal a great difference in rural urban population, with a larger number of rural folk living if not working on fewer acres, many of them no doubt on a subsistence basis. Belief is that millions of former city workers who came from the farm have gone back there. To this factor must be added the unquestioned fact that rural births have more than balanced rural deaths, while the birth rate in cities in steady decline supports the thought that the 1935 count of populations will serve to change the ratio by which 56 per cent of the population of continental United States is urban and only 44 per cent rural. It is doubtful, of course, if we ever recross the line that was crossed between 1910 and 1920, when urban population exceeded rural for the first time, but there are many reasons to be found in support of belief that the 1935 count will be nearer balance. What will come to pass when industry is back on its feet and the business of urban centers is humming, as it has hummed before, is another matter. But we must in all fairness consider the happy time to come when the farming industry is back on its feet and humming and renews itself as a drawing card.

There are before us many schemes leading to the country, some of them good and some not so good. We are looking forward to the rehabilitation of the farm and farm life and, in natural sequence, revival of the smaller centers of business and industry that are classed rural and will probably always remain rural in the separation established by the census department. Decentralization of industry has its advocates who view industrial workers in the character of part-time farm workers on their own subsistence acres. Great areas of submarginal land are to be withdrawn and the land that is left worked to better advantage, with more workers on the fewer acres. Unemployables will be farmed out on their own small holdings, and the country made attractive to persons who are unhappy in the cities.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

WHY EAST WIND HAS ILL EFFECT ON SOME CROPS

Although science has been the "giant-killer" of superstition and folklore, in some cases it has proved rather than disproved seemingly unfounded beliefs. An interesting example of the proof of an old adage was announced recently at the Department of Agriculture.

Scientists at the department at first dismissed as an "old wives' tale" the statement of truck growers in some parts of Florida that "the east wind poisons crops." But F. L. Wellman heard it so often he decided there must be some basis for the idea.

The facts he tracked down bear out the folk idea that the east winds do injure many of the truck crops, although the poison explanation has no real basis.

In the so-called "celery delta area," 35 to 50 miles from the Atlantic coast, truck growers always have to fight a variety of pests—fungus and insects. They often suffer loss from "burning" of foliage by wind and sun.

It so happens that the east wind, in crossing the Gulf Stream, is warmed and takes up a large quantity of water. When the warm and moist wind reaches the truck area it deposits moisture as dew, which favors the growth of the plant pests.

The warmth and moisture develop fungus diseases. Some of the diseases are carried by aphids, which are waked by the warmth of the east wind. The aphid spread is aided by the wind so that growers can easily see that the eastern part of fields is affected first and most seriously.

Again it may happen that the tender green foliage will not be able to withstand the rise of 30 degrees accompanying an east wind, and it may "burn." So there is a real reason to dread the effects of the east wind, although its poisoning of crops is indirect.—Washington Post.

Spare the Spinach!

The main value of spinach lies in its good content of iron, its alkali-forming mineral, and its vitamin A, B, and C content. All these elements, however, are present in other vegetables. Naturally no two green vegetables are exactly alike in composition, but there is an advantage in this fact in that it provides release from monotony. Try serving some of the other green vegetables to your children and find out what they like; then you can gauge the amounts of these to provide exactly the same things for which you are using spinach.—Dr. Walter H. Eddy in Good Housekeeping.

Almost No Limit to Entre Dishes

Many Substantial Enough to Be Served as Chief on Menu Bill.

The French word entre has become almost Americanized from its constant use on formal menus, and on hotel bills of fare. It signifies side dishes that belong to a hearty group. They are not main dishes, such as roasts, joints, etc., but comprise such dishes as chicken a la king, broiled mushrooms, croquettes, escalloped sweetbreads and other escalloped dishes of meat, fish, fowl, vegetables, etc. In fact, many entrees are substantial enough for main dishes, although they would not be listed as such on menus. However, at hotels, clubs, etc., they are served on a la carte orders at patrons' wishes, instead of the heavier meats, fish, fowl, and bird orders. In the United States entrees include an amazing assortment of foods, even broiled lamb chops, and veal cutlets.

However, it is the preparation of the foods which relegates them to the entre class, almost as much as the foods themselves. Sauces are of great importance, and fancy preparations of dishes. An unusual and yet a simple entre is sautéed fillet of fish with cabbage tartare.

Sole, flounder, or any filets, or even slices of fish such as halibut, salmon or cod, are lightly fried in a little butter or bacon fat. These are arranged around the outside of the platter or serving dish, which has in the center the cabbage tartare.

This is made by scooping out the heart of a young cabbage, chopping the heart fine, mixing it with tartare sauce and returning the cabbage preparation to the cabbage shell. This container is cut even around the top, making it closely resemble a delicate green bowl.

The foundation for tartare sauce is mayonnaise. To 1 cupful is added 2 tablespoonfuls each of chopped olives and gherkins, 1 tablespoonful chopped sweet pepper, 1/2 teaspoonful chopped onion, 1 tablespoonful capers and 1 tablespoonful minced parsley.

A more delicate cabbage tartare is made by using 1/4 chopped celery to 3/4 chopped cabbage, and the other ingredients as given. Should the homemaker not have all the other ingredients, some may be omitted. For instance, olives, sweet pepper, or gherkins, any one of which can be left out, but there must be diversity enough to change the mayonnaise into a tartare. Zest is necessary. Lemon slices should dress the fish about the platter, and it is attractive to have radishes interspersed.
